

Do You Agree?

Dec. 2nd was set aside here in Saskatchewan as a day of caring or a day of giving. It is a good idea. However, it prompts me to think why? Why would or should we set aside a day of caring or giving? Human nature suggests that every day should be a day of caring not just one day of the year.

We just celebrated Christmas, a season of giving and caring, and some of us set New Year's resolutions. Would it not be a good idea to set a New Year's resolution for ourselves that we would become more caring and giving through the whole year not just one day? We live in a society that needs to become more caring. The more we show love to our fellow beings, the better we make the world we live in.

I once read a story about a man who was looking to move into a new town and stopped and asked an older man sitting by a tree, what kind of people lived in the town. The older man said, "What were the people like in the town you came from?" The man said, "They were not that nice. They were angry and aggressive. A lot of them were not kind people". The old man said, "They are the same in this town." A while later another man came along and asked the same question. The older man said, "How were the people in the town you came from?" The man replied and said, "They were wonderful. Always willing to help you. They are kind and caring and generous." The old man looked up and said, "They are the same here".

The story moral is 'we get what we give'. If our attitude is one of caring, we will find people that have the same attitude. So if you are one of those angry people that gives others the finger when they drive differently, if you curse and swear at people, if you think only of yourself, you need to change if you want to find the good people. If you don't care now, learn to care. Make caring and loving an everyday occurrence in your life.

It will change your life forever!
